Edited by Ron Henry, Ithaca, NY.

AUGHT hopes to provide a forum for poetry and prose poems exploring the use of innovative language and imagery, including "language-oriented" formal experimentation and its various descendants. Since 1997 it has given a home to poetry from over 200 new and established writers.

blindness: seven poems for kate

"I want to give everything to this burnt flower: I’ve nothing; I bury my face; set it in water."
— John Thompson, Stiltjack

“Optometry begins with an I.” — Jason Christie

this is not an explanation, but a small degree when crossing the street, looks left, & then not as left would you mind if i revised my statement, thing it doesn’t matter if you can ride your bicycle leans to one side, just like her mother

after the optician, now we follow

II

some light & some shapes, but little more on the darker side of her

one half of her signature scarred not that it seems to bother

more us than her

both shaken & stirred but then her other, what since long improved the border she stops at further abroad

III

where does she walk, favouring one side a distance that goes further into detail

what she would have lost, just yesterday the rain erases snow from her backyard

the sun on her forearm

a hard knock rings her kitchen window

this is the sheetmusic of her youth

forget her comments abt peg-leg, or patch

my child

blind in one eye, & drunk on chocolate

would she drive me around when im eighty her mother says, you wont live that long

we pick at last nights food

we look out over long communion

looks good, in new blue glasses unknown where the scratch came, fall or something viral all ahead me now, begins to slowly fade

my age, by decreasing inch where blood mixes thick w/ saliva

what chance did she have, genetics can be cruel

a stretch of grey thick dark hair & a penchant for oddities

VI

she says: what do you know, yr too old or was that me

& shes too young, for consequences

rolling her eyes at what, a mere suggestion suddenly, the sheer confidence of youth

& glasses match, her new blue coat

what she has come thru so far
VII

this is a darkness that conveys a sense of certain light, a thing in recent memory a colour that translates a shape against the skin or rightness, when remembered w/ some into the descriptiveness of seeing what had not been there before

I

the complexity of wisdom

is power enough. i will not linger, will not linger on the death.

she was in her head

a long time, & then wasnt. took out brain cells & the bodys ruin, wearing down & gone away, like bedsheets in the will, or crouched in the tub, i will not.

the silent message of private conversations allude, & keep on years after the bodys wake, give out increments of need & hearts desire, creeping out of hindsight & family photos. gives him a flower pot, gives her the war medals gained from someone older, whats left of her eighty-seven down to this,
in boxes, wood & cardboard.

w/ even greater power to disturb & amaze, what lies, the shape of my uncles jaw, or grandmothers cheekbone, to her daughter, deflecting wind. twelve hands allude to measures more than painkillers, sleepless wedge, lift out of the casket, & go ground. let out & exhale grief, like a balloon, shove out invisible to the air

& migrates, little bits thru grandchildren, great.

the death of nature sits, in the reflective voice, echoes & then lingers, still. white sand ripples in the waters point

& slows, settle bottom down, become where once were separate, the grief

& then the death of grief, a page, former, turning, like dropping names are droppt.

After Affect

There is fire in the sun.
There is not much sun.

The reality boat of sediment dances on my infirm sleep.

There is fire in the sun,
I will visit its citizens.

Salt with the slip of llamas, star of stars,
somber of slumber,

darkness of light of the vented alms.

Now in the innocent hour, when without sentences, in the umbilical cord:
An unremembered poem has constrained your horse, has imploded your birds, has gulped the time with proper concerns.

Has terminated the self of which nothing commences.

Rebellion consists in the seeing of the rose after pulverizing the eyes.

The beloved veterans, enter, hallucinations with the pigmented skin of the parrot, cocoons of memories devouring their speech, entering the coffers of citizens, and speaking to old beasts.

In the hour of the creased land in the memory of the cowboy, time pronounces discourse in the moment of the lilies.

As someone enters death with eyes open, another appears in your vision.

The color of time in the abandoned wall. In my sight, thought parted all.

It’s more than in proximity, more than near, to know what here, was.

Ahead

Today, we are inclined to destroy the reverent peonies before a million watching mountains. Wait for the innate molding, smoldering rays that torture the trashing of the villa of its fog.

Return blue sonnets in red-greens, defile that hive in tremendous baritones.

Want to be more altruistic for buying barbs, as Alzar frees bandits.

Trade the hollers of others, float my desperation, Aurora.

Imagination of your equality in cold aesthetic.

Return the brave in annulled pieces, kilometers of nuisances and nieces, and gulps of the relevant tourniquet.

Duplicitious

And the time strangles my sister.

Twelve figures, insidious gains configuring gratitude.

Tilling roads under the obscure pose.

Record the roughness of turning mountains and ocular radios,
two yellow cups,
two rasping gorillas.

Two kisses communicate the vision of an existence of another existence.

Two promises of tremendous locution.

Actually two promises of yes sir and no sir.

Two play the rounds of casinos of champagne yellow whiteness.

Two mirages/visions circle the avenue of a sister girl.

Four soldiers revolve/revolt.
Debris, one death, one nothing.

Are the ardent wayfarers disconnecting over my future.

Discontented baked cow.

My only recourse the somber of the trite sun hat.

Appendages of my sister.

Promises that coagulated in front of the sign of the strangled sisters, and the time strangles my sister's star, brilliant ascent of another.

a system of ardor hustles in the spring. droplets fall through the atmosphere onto adjacent water surfaces, shedding possibilities as they go. power contestations in the earth sciences roll in doughy thunder & tender unshuffled clouds to their paintings. in the public consciousness, calicoed girls vex their much celebrated heads toward the soaring convoys. the “a” in “vast expanse” dusts off its marginalia at the horizon. time spreads, disfigured in its own markets. wafting atoms meticulously count their pregnant clicks. i don’t believe in these vain roots any more than i yearn for a roundabout way of walking through transcendence. the time of day is what one fashions in the part of the brain that says “merge” into a humanistic landscape. the cane is part of the human body. but why stop at anything?

Loosening of borders, boundaries, words,

What do they know that we don't? —W. Herzog weeping of fluids, the body losing all distinction, miscegenation, tension drained (tension itself the result of toxic reflux, tonic for an embedded mechanism stuck on jam (think of what it would feel like to be Proteus, silk fruit one moment, a lost nut the next, and when the durations between these and such as these is like pouring a glass of water for Cadmus, all ways going over fluid sides (Zeno was having us on, he said If you think the explanations for what you might mean by that which you question, even the questions themselves, like those about ratios in the interplay between gradations of time and being in its motions, are in such ways rational, everything is the same thing, and it's unmoving as well. You are basically a block, etc. Even ancient clocks jump from their shelves and walls to run beneath the terror of a sky that was born yesterday, incubated in the moment of its own dispersals almost waking you up, sighing beneath the closet with vacant eyes. Otherwise. Every human being is an abyss. You get dizzy when you look down. (Woyzeck)

Art of Darkness

Celestial calculations, the sky some eternal clause, think of the dance it must have been each night, movement in the memory of each, of a machine before machines, a presence before eyes. I've had dreams where the night sky blossomed with planets, moons, stars, comets, asteroids, like giant blimps and jets of light rowing across the retina, as though on wires, slow motion trapeze against the frozen and fiery blackness, bathed in such sights, I'd rise fairly luminous myself, into spring rapture of syrinx, epos of leaf still ringing in the predawn or torn by the sound of a car on the curve, tires and rushing air — shriek beneath — world pouring out of forms, I'd wonder how to weigh the opening breath of night, running fluid calibration where zero is nothing if not that which could but does not exist where or when the pronoun and its lack of referential conception achieve a momentary correspondence, no part outside of part, no part beyond, the possible as threshold for nothing which cannot exist, portal for the dust of stars for instance.

Morning Memory Raga

Burgundy darkness, plants stretched across. Leafwork, red wine. In his dream, he pulls himself off the floor of sleep and goes walking. Down corridors, sidewalks and into hills, etc. An idea follows him. Why must he come to his errors like a whipped dog, ashamed for what he did, and frightened, but willing to suffer the punishment of his life in order to bask once again in He Whose Presence such resolution may be found, what peace or what is it, asleep in the warm lap of experience? Restitution. Thirty-seven beautiful freshmen begin caressing him with their eyes. They are tasting his every port and portal. Yikes! He tells a small group, "but I probably couldn't stand to talk to one of them for more than fifteen minutes. Not more than three in a single day." Someone from beyond asks him to sign a chair, her husband doesn't mind. He signs for them both, not realizing his mistake until later, when he wakes, unmated. In the darkness, leaves and the scroll of eyes, the desolation of planets woven into landscape, hard plain at night, desert where his hand makes a curious talisman. If you get rid of all the swaddle, it says, you could get on with your life. Shining in the darkness, perplexed, amused, he falls back down, and fast asleep.
Marthe Reed

Isola Pescatori, I

Motion refuses capture, a periodic disturbance. Hull length presupposes crest speed where granite waits water, another pressure. Sussuration at the edge of consciousness boundaries its own fluidity. She sits encapsulated by sound. A boat cuts through the lago, its blue and brown body writing green into white. Mountains insist horizon. She retreats outside, leaving behind an undefined stillness above water. Like air, body which has fullness and not a line. A description in prose. Such fluidity disguises the situation. Sound glittering and bluegreen.

Isola Pescatori, II

Hydrology asserts a vessel contour of sound, black crowned tern knifing sun-warmed air. 10 a.m. A wave performs a wake. We are not without questions. Green persimmons nestle in leafy shade. Wren and sparrow chorus. No matter, a body which is bodiless, architects the moment. Shapes a space into which “we” appear. Terracotta roofs, pink and red geraniums, jasmine. A single bell tolls the half-hour. San Vittore. A space which is sound. Another boat recedes away, clamor falling into water. To construe pink from gray granite requires a ritual gravity, the precise placement of chairs before water and light. Bodiless also. We accept shade, light and shadow performing their own wake upon the air, and the hard convex surfaces of persimmons.

Isola Pescatori, III

Architecture asserts a window defined by the presence of camellias and a grey and orange cat. Sparrow hunting is a dicey business. What vanishes at the edge of sight, sites this. A distant palazzo, a crumbling church, a forest of larch. Butter dissolves on the tongue, abandoning bread. Uno cioccolato, per favori. Artemis acknowledges the light as her own, without comment, as mist slips silently into the water, masking both distance and sound. Only a red kayak. A red kayak heads to the smallest of the islands. A noise of hens or swans, cygnets obedient to the frame posed by jasmine and camellia. The lago invites me. “I” would like to swim. She takes ham from my fingers, delicately licking them. No one is awake.

Crag at Les Ayes

“tracking the last aria, like a duration of water which is a piece of white silk” —Mei-mei Berssenbrugge

Tracking a duration of orange and black butterflies drawn to blue, anemone divide grey from orange lichen. Magnesium carbonate dusts his fingers. Horizontally. Limestone, creviced and cracked, young larch spill pale and coned over the dome. “On belay”. Hovering, translucent black wings drive pulses of air over her skin. “Ascendeur” (Climbing) a vertical flake, snow melt mutters past asters and blue campanule. “By your knee”, a sudden orange of grasshopper wings over an arête. Carabineers clink on wet air, tracking a duration of creamy black spot butterflies. “Tension.” A duration. Apollon tensions this, cool white silk, which is cloud (air). A sloper and a meadow aria, spires of mauve flowers bright against hayfields. Wild rose and wild raspberries (sweet) mountain blueberries (wild) and ledges, “climb on”. Adoration against a backdrop of larch hillsides, of water driven by gravity, cloud and cascade endure. Rosed succulents cluster concentric against rock “Slack” send skyward pink stalk and pink bud. Crimps blue cloud and white sky. Below, peches blancs et pain aux noix. “Climbing” Dion Farquhar

a bicycle I crushed walnuts, twisting their etiolate juices into the road. In Pahalgam I died a metaphorical death; climbing down from the meadow to an iced stream, it's as if the water pulled my soul from my fingers. Now, when I try to reach out and grasp my existence, it flows like so much sterile water into the gulf. Die before you die.

Julia Cohen

Beads

The mood was not old enough to participate. Wheelchairs I had for dice, yes. 2 layers later it was 2 am then a party came in the smoke she was smoking. These were the beads that strung the necklace she stroked. Her quiet request of 6 difficult quantities for 6 different qualifications. I could not compete with an impetuous fatherland. Mirrors lie I kissed her she lied. Deception is always old enough to grow.

Neptune with No Pronouns

The pine tree had no enemies and the branch held a cheek.

A body and a body in black grass. Look at Neptune, the blue whale.

To swim, to spout light from a great distance. Hands browsed the fallen, asking, Is the return easer or more arduous? To overlap a body and a body in black grass, no distance an enemy could cross.

Consonant song

Weather’s thatched us mysterious.

Most days break coastal after good shaking—life’s glitter siphons through hands as feathers find light and blacken.

An almanac’s looked-after fracture: forever a light or a corpse.

Were things more ordinary we’d give them all names, but they’re not worth a candle, not worth a flame.

What’s to burn when a field feeds the sea and is.

I'm Waiting,

there are thorns in the blackberries, drawing scratches,

I'm waiting, reckless endangerment on every highway,

I'm waiting in the fire, its calendar, its peeling heart,

I'm waiting, there's only dying, here, suck on its velvet,

I'm waiting against a tower, to be stabbed, whistling

I hate all gods with planets, hurling verbs at their white columns, waiting for the sky to fill with blades & blackties & monosyllabics, I'm waiting for Barack Obama to enter stageleft & start flipping the script, this, the final classroom, extracted from the mouth's onslaught of teeth, I'm waiting, where are knuckles, where's redness, where waiting, a 500lb bomb, hurts like a will night tongue its press flat against my pajamas,

I'm waiting, West Bank, for you to be without tubes or imported dirt, for voices in the halls to be other shadows, buildings, deserts,

I, with scissors, doorframe, & lymphnode, am waiting, waiting to dissect home & homewardness, to construct a new mantle.

When the Blinds Are Drawn

Your knees forget the moves to classical dances. No one tells the manifestation of the world with dance anymore. I don't want to think about your knees, I don't want to wish them away.

Words pass through imagination, they turn into things. Things get turned into thoughts & back to words. Your wrists are brackets. Disenfranchised. They're more attractive in the rain.

There shouldn't be any water in the skin. When you hold the teapot in the palm of your hand, the room fondles the hair on my legs. I want you to stop moving.

My ears are topped with expensive wine. Your southern country opens its mountains & its borders thin the blood. The words out of your mouth never give me hope.
Do you have to leave handprints on the showertiles? Don’t leave the kaleidoscope in the water. Its redblue triangles scare potential lovers & keep them from lining up on the porch.

We shouldn’t speak to each other the way we do. Words don’t know how to act. You’re not careful enough. Don’t make me think I’m not really here.

My heart’s a green matchstick. At any time it could be struck. I could become familiar again or I could find the ocean more giving.

The jar of seashells grows dust in the corner. We’re a lot like that, can’t you see that? The cone of myrrh wilting on the nightstand. We’re that way too.

Words end up being used as names. What we assume about ourselves is assumed by those names. I forget your real name, which seems indicative of how much I like having you around.

When the humidity disappears in the stringlights, their white heads, their Saturn orbs, their Ophelias, I imagine being on a deserted island. I wouldn’t be able to hear your blond hair rapunzelining on the rocks outside the window.

Your bellybuttonring’s the end of thought. It snags my throat. You put too much pressure on the hips to straighten the pelvis. When I mention you, others think I’ve been unfaithful to the city.

Antigram

This is a test, strip of typing, fingers that knuckle the hieroglyphs. Higher gifts than mine are the dome’s. All I eat here’s the day, getting through sixteen itches of plate glass, forearms that hide.

The arch of arc’s an absent letter, an hour with sound, beads that water a point’s mintfresh spartan. O livid link, O peristasis of cooler. I take a tack on the estuary filled with suitcases.

I’ve gone back to where the telephone burns a telling form, a telling foam, a telling fun, that of rooster, biometric spur, iris booming with light that can be slit down the middle, saturated with before diabolical reception. I off the scalp, rainsoaked staff, new sentry, come with grifted cream to desert the being home in the unlived. I gush, dry up, position my silk between juice & rind.

One glance off-task and what used to square, spins. Here comes another fearful statistic, nonchalant, whisper-quiet in toe-dyed sneakers, a decade early. Her chance parlor & laundromat is such a holy mess: empty Rit boxes and pull-tabs, pop-tarts and Pall Malls, warning labels, dead corsages. She replaces one rule with ten exceptions (this is her job), and the rule is happier, disproved. In the color-fast lost, she finds the even-numbered of every suit and renders them sleeveless. Great numbers feel saved by their missing arms: nowhere to stash the trick. Trying not to unravel, the heavily-soiled linens maintain their dignity while the numbers nose around. It's best not to set your cycles by the activities of mere statistics. She decides to take the advice of a ventriloquist and hire a muralist to paint her reality — a collaborate deception.

Auberge du soleil

Auberge du soleil is obscured by olive trees and nestles in a hill. Casa del Mar is of pale stucco backed by a dell of Ferns. The Chateau Tivoli was built in 1892. The Babbling Brook sits in a shaded wood. The Blue Whale has a tiny Japanese garden. On the island of San Pablo Bay there’s the East Brother Light Station. From Roundstone Farm you’ll see Tomales Bay. The Maison Fleurie was formerly known as Magnolia. Wisteria surrounds the Thistle Dew. Rosemary Camiformio is the chef at St. Orres and serves Raccoon potpie. Avalon House is by the beach. Wine & Roses is an historic White Farmhouse about hundred years old. The Coloma has a collection of blue-and-white Delftware jars. The Foxes have a selection of Rococo Revival sofas. Tumbling Waterfalls is a sight at Flume’s End. At Grandmère’s you can sit on stone benches and eat cookies. The Heirloom is decorated with copper kettles. The Shore House is located at a sharp curve in the road on Lake Tahoe. White Horse Inn makes homemade breads. The fireplace at the Yosemite Peregrine is made from local Rock. The Rainbow Tarns rests in a hillside and appears to defy gravity. Malibu Beach Inn has a “Malibu look”: red-tile roof, and Terra-cotta floors. Marjorie Bettenhausen owns the Seal Beach Inn and has flower-filled Napoleonic jardinières; an iron fountain from Paris; and Mediterranean tile murals. On a clear day you can see Catalina Island from Casa Tropicana. In the San Bernardino Mountains, Bracken Fern is known for its sordid past. Eagle’s Landing soars above the trees. Korakia Pensione replicates a villa in Tangier. Windermere Manor has gleaming chandeliers. Windy Point is surrounded on three sides by water. Inn at 657 is a polyglot of men in Armani suits and men in rags. Portofino has bouffant balloon curtains; Faux-marble columns; lace antimacassars; curved-back settees; and etched glass windows. Los Olivos is tucked into Oak-dotted ocher hills of the Santa Ynez Valley. The Ballard Inn is in Cape Cod-style. The Crystal Rose is a three-story pinker. Mary May was built in 1880. The Squibb House lacks creature comforts. The Upham is topped with a cupola. At the Jabberwock, “Things are not always as they seem.” Mangels House was once owned by a sugar baron. The Post Ranch boasts:
“We just fit Big Sur.” If you prefer a Moorish style, visit the Cypress Inn. The Gatehouse Inn is an Italianate Victorian house. The Gosby is gabled. Robles Del Rio favors an Old-fashioned Cowboy living style. At Grandma’s there are plenty of floral overstuffed sofas. Pillar Point is North of Half Moon Bay. Le Chateau du Sureau evokes childhood memories. White Sulphur Springs overlooks the Mohawk Valley. Clover Valley is near a tiny sawmill town. Enjoy a Champagne evening at the Stonepine. The Centrella was built in 1889. Just Inn? Stroll among orange, plum, lemon, tangerine, and box elder trees at the Fern Oaks Inn. La Mer is visible from afar. Head for the Olallieberry, “Where time stands still.” Villa Rosa has wrought-iron balconies. Apple Lane was once part of a Spanish land Grant. Anna’s Three Bears is where Goldilocks Never had it so good. Auberge Des Artistes is Located on a funky stretch of Fillmore Street. At Inn Above the Tides binoculars are available For a view of Angel Island. The Camellia Inn is Replete with Oriental rugs. Harvest Inn has a View of the Mayacamas Mountains. If you like White picket fences, visit the Blue Spruce. For fairy tales go to the Happy Landing Inn With its Hansel and Gretel cottages. If you still Like picket fences, go to Los Laurels instead. “Cead Mile Failte” is the Gaelic motto meaning A hundred thousand welcomes, and you’ll find Them at the Sandpiper.

The Butterfield Bed
Is a rustic hideaway from wives and husbands. Truffles Bed has a wraparound veranda and Is full of surprises. Bruce and Sharon Taylor Purchased the Cliff Crest Bed. The Feather Bed has a touch of Corinthian columns. The Tres Palmas Bed is anybody’s bed. Bock’s Bed… well make of it what you will. Petite Auberge is of Baroque Revival and is a better Bed than Bock’s Bed. It is where Chantal Caught her husband.

She also found him at Madrona manor; Montecito; Abigail’s; Julian’s Beltane’s; Gingerbread; Joshua Grindle; Rosa; Pelican; Bancroft; Blackthorne; Bella Maggiore; Carmel; Camellia; Chateau Du Lac; and Fawnskin.

Urban Affairs

We approve of intersections but are opposed to streets in general.

Alleyways and dead ends should be paved over with mountains.

Instead of stop signs, the shadow of a dog, or a hybrid beast with the body of a whale and the head of a turkey.

Out with mayors, in with majordomos.

We prefer aldermen to councilmen, but what we really need are chickens.

Illegal immigrants are taking our jobs. Soon they will take our employers, electrocute their genitals, and eat their children.

We have too many potholes. They should be filled with violets, or ideas.

The Department of Children and Family Services is a front for genetic engineers; they are turning our orphans to lemurs.

Schools are overcrowded. Forty-five pigeons in one classroom: not a proper learning environment.

Landlords have united in their efforts to keep porches from jumping off buildings. Porches are unhappy. They are lining up to collect unemployment. Traffic has never been worse.

Our children have no parks to play in. They play in sewers and eat bleach.

A new initiative on the ballot: replace teachers with fire-hydrants, eliminate the need for air-conditioning.

Illegal immigrants are invading our culture. Soon they will invade our libraries.

Coffins are fleeing the cemetery. They are sick of housing the dead.

For all that it is circumspect, there is nothing in the page size of Slavonic mythology to suggest the loss of movement or illegal organisations of a terrorist nature. The audience is not seated. The corresponding solid figure is formed by packaging various household medicines. Yams & sweet potatoes were introduced 1200 years ago & this produced a tempering of the General's iron rule.

In a single day the continued use or enjoyment of a right serves no useful purpose. Most are invisible. The logic gates are not connected so any disturbance is noticeable only at an atomic level. Moment to moment movement is unpredictable & goes beyond the limit of his powers.

She washes her clothes in the tub. From the back, it hangs. Chocolate fading incongruously on the table, courtyard air to suck unsuspecting. Limpid limbs through which the step, at first firm, speaks.

Above, a street blows trash down an angular slate. Stepped. Partly arrival to rural German slapstick overcome. Lunch (?), a hurried alley disjoint. The rash and greasy plastic skins keep idols, less contamination; they give the street away. Busses seem logical but the weary electricity, prerequisite. wondering why You felt compelled
To say whatever you said

a mountain mass Setting fire…
to whitie’s ass

Asking the checker lilies Are you white or are you black can you jerk along the fault line

Marking the boundary to the west decreasing gradually

The alluvial deposits leaving dead

Let the major floristic changes be a black poem of Franciscan rocks or northern margin

There is paleobotanical evidence for private dungeons

Taking lives if need be Making our own world of this Life : its dying needs in a blank necessity relinquished * to burnished beauty * now burnt . . . one raw red renting relished rose : its flesh abiding (unto

Light *
abandons us in its aching ardent intent . . . O simple mystery !
O unsilent world ! . . . as these giving reeds which slowly waver in their as * so ancient calligraphy . . .
the diagonal marks : equilateral impresses which upon these now imagined pages mark a stranger Light : one bright -er still * than all cold dark’s symbolic landscape

bloody knife, [he is] laughing, I am alone down by the pick-up track crossroads dust in the air knives surrendered placed gently on the ground wrapped up in ribbons, rings soiled around the pink the dirt everything is absorbed circular we don’t miss anything now

I’ve been having nightmares, alone with the knife wielder this dream where the one murdered is the murderer himself seeing what realism misses every view a box, a portion I have on gloves, I have the knife, a ring in my hand

What is Diego painting now?

I slide the ring onto the knife take off one glove evaporate, take the form of rock goodbye

concatenatious dream song

A girl on a horse.
Burnt umber.
Short hair the color of the horse’s.
Concatenation.
We are linked.
She lives in my room.
In the railroad-style house I used to live in.
We go to visit her.
My father and I.
everything is open
everything is locked
New gates have been put in everywhere, maze of gates, we open one, there is another, we open that one, there is another.
They are all locked but the locks do not work.
We finally enter my room, which is her room now.

everything is open
everything is locked

I am afraid of pearls and there are daggers in my pillow.
      everything is open
      everything is locked

There is so much order here.
I wondered if she is a me of the past but why is everything so organized and empty, uncluttered, such openness.
I wonder if she is my potential.
There is a typewriter in the middle of the room on its own typewriter-sized table.
Nothing against the wall but necessity.
A bed. Green shutters.
      A bell

hanging from the door but when she leaves (everything is open) she walks through the window, so nothing rings,
        no clatter,
        no clutter.

    (and the places we can visit the food we can eat)

Things You Think You Should Know About:

Titan’s notorious haze and you here licorice-less and shining of something other something less, and more real
Why are you standing there in the shadows without a spiral or a coil or something shining in your palm?

Such shaded top hats that leave no cover.
Ulcers of finality—and you here all alone and me here all alone

Titan’s haze is there something I should know about you that I don’t know that I don’t see by looking sunscreen, masks and rosary beads evaporating, smearing across the lines and there is something else but…

both of us are here together all alone except for that owl here in broad daylight and both of us are here together yet all alone and always a third thing to remind you what are you not looking at what do you not see that the owl sees turn around turn around hoot hoot   orange eyes a sun inside glowing outwards what you can’t see because you match it wait for night wait for night

Un-finned

blurry concave recipricocity there is a mountain around me what surrounds me is what's inside me stubborn southern street scoundrel pecan capital of the world and inside me so warm so hum well then there needs to be an elephant crazy indigenous me coming out of me pecans echo secrets to each other "I do not think that they will sing to me" Rapallo inside. Rapallo seeping singing sleeping seething and something shiny and black piano keys suggesting and singing and breathing so hum

so full of birds and thousands of birds “bring the green boy white ways” and thousands “white lake trembles down to green goings on” do you hear it?

so full of birds, so full of birds this mountain what's inside me what surrounds me do you hear it? a shining you cannot see Contributors to Aught, No. 15 (2006) rob mclennan lives in Ottawa, Canada's glorious capital city, even though he was born there. The author of ten poetry collections, he has two more forthcoming: name, an errant (Stride, UK, 2006) and The Ottawa City Project (Chaudiere Books, 2007). A prolific writer, editor and publisher, he edited the anthologies side/lines: a new canadian poetics (Insomniac Press, 2002) and Groundswell: the best of above/ground press, 1993-2003 (Broken Jaw Press, 2003). He often reviews and rants on his clever blog -- www.robmclennan.blogspot.com Bruna Mori's book of poems with sumi-ink paintings and e-chapbook will be published in 2006 by Meritage Press and Ahadada Books, respectively. Her poetry appears in journals such as Fence and ZYZZYVA. She presently teaches writing at Art Center College of Design and the Southern California Institute of Architecture in Los Angeles. Her contributions to this issue of Aught are inspired by the work of Alejandra Pizarnik.

Justin Vicari has work appearing or forthcoming in American Poetry Review, Phoebe, Megaera, Interim, Slant, Rhino, Eclipse, Third Coast, Disquieting Muses Quarterly, Memorious, Gin Bender Poetry Review, Poetry Motel, Eratio, Softblow, Stirring, Film Quarterly, Postmodern Culture, and other journals. He is the author of the chapbooks In a Garden of Eden (Plan B Press, 2005) and Woman Bathing Light to Dark (Toad Press, 2006).

Camille Martin lives in New Orleans but is moving to Toronto in September 2005. Her collections of poetry are FABLED HUE (Poetic Inhalation, 2005), SESAME KIOSK (Potes & Poets, 2001), MAGNUS LOOP (Chax Press, 1999), ROGUE EMBRYO (Lavender Ink, 1999), and PLASTIC HEAVEN (Fell Swoop, 1996). For a review of her poem "-esque," go to http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2005/02/esque-camille-martin.html

Crag Hill has been exploring the world through the prisms of verbal and visual language since his re-birth in the 1970s. Writer of numerous chapbooks and/or other interventions in print, including SIXIXSIX (Xexoxial Endarchy), TRAINS SL:AY HUNS (Generator), DICT (Xexoxial Endarchy), ANOTHER SWITCH (Norton Coker Press), and YES JAMES, YES JOYCE (Loose Gravel Press), he has also edited SCORE magazine, a publication exploring, seeking, the edges of writing, since 1983. His latest book, co-edited with Bob Grumman, is WRITING TO BE SEEN, the first major anthology of visual poetry in 30 years. He maintains a poetry blog, too: scorecard Skip Fox: Recently in Ambit, Sugar Mule, Poetic Inhalation, Tarpaulin Sky, Big Bridge, Hamilton Stone Review, Malleable Jungle, Black Box, eratio, Gestalten, House Organ, Word for/Word, moria, Fuck, and Dirty Swamp. Previously in Talisman, Hambone, lower limit speech, Exquisite Corpse, sendecki.com, etc. Four chapbooks. (Bloody Twin, Oasis, Auguste, and one book (Potes & Poets). In a couple anthologies including Another South: Experimental Writing in the South (U of Alabama P).

Marthe Reed lives in Lafayette, Louisiana, that fortunate gap threaded between Katrina and Rita. Her poetry has recently appeared in Exquisite Corpse, Sugar Mule, New Orleans Review, and Golden Handcuffs Review.

Dion Farquhar is a poet and prose fiction writer. Obsessed by her formative experience of the Sixties and repudiating nothing, she is currently finishing a novel that conjures the erased social DNA of a generation's formation. Her poems have appeared in Otoliths, Poems Niederngasse, OBAN 06, Perigee, The Argotist, Xcp: Streetnotes, Rogue Scholars, City Works, boundary 2, Hawaii Review, Lip Service, Cream City Review, Sinister Wisdom, Painted Bride Quarterly, etc., and her chapbook "Cleaving" won First Prize in the 2007 Poet's Corner Press competition.

John Gimblett: Having travelled extensively throughout southeast Asia, and in particular, India, I'm still drawing largely on those experiences in my writing. In poetry I seem to have moved 'back' to an earlier style of mine, more free-flowing and introspective, unlike most of the poems in my first book 'Mister John'. I am also writing fiction, and still engaged in painting and photography. Still living in Wales, I try to get away when I can, and always come back enlightened in some small way. This poem, 'Ether', uses the Anglo-Welsh style of Dylan Thomas and R. S. Thomas (itself heavily influenced by earlier poetry in Wales) in what is essentially a very introspective poem about my time living in Kashmir in late 1986. The last line of the poem - 'Die before you die' is a Sufi saying; perhaps a defining statement of the beliefs of the sect.
Julia Cohen is an editorial assistant at Palgrave Macmillan, a fiction reader for Small Spiral Notebook, and Managing Editor for Nightboat Books. Her poetry and prose has been published or is forthcoming in Octopus, How2, Word For/Word, Hanging Loose, GutCult, Boog City, The Tiny, and Pindelyboz.
